The 'Religion and Constitutional Practices in Asia' Conference will bring together twenty emerging and seasoned scholars from South Asia, South-East Asia, Australasia, and North America to examine the interaction between religion and constitutional practices in thirteen Asian jurisdictions. Focusing on countries where strong religious identification exists in the social and political spheres, the Conference will feature discussions on what is treated as the 'Constitution' in matters involving religion; the impact of religion on constitutional law and development; and the broader social and political dynamics shaping the relationship between law and religion in selected countries in Asia.
